Pre-Conference Workshop

Saturday, May 14, 2011

8:30 - 12:00

Spice Up Your Training!

This half-day workshop will focus on two methods you can use to add spice to your training programs. Try screen casting to create video tutorials which allow users to learn at their own pace 24/7. Use the Japanese performance art of Pecha Kucha to enhance even the dullest topics. After a presentation regarding tips and tricks for each, you will have some time to draft a presentation using one of the tools.

This half-day workshop will focus on two methods you can use to add pizzazz to your training programs. Try screen casting to create video tutorials which allow users to learn at their own pace 24/7. Use the Japanese performance art of Pecha Kucha to enhance even the dullest topics. After a presentation regarding tips and tricks for each, you will have some time to draft a presentation using one of the tools. Facilitating the workshop are three knowledgeable speakers with extensive experience in their area of expertise. Carol Watson, Director of the Law Library, University of Georgia Law will build on the Pecha Kucha presentation she gave at last year's AALL conference. Dale Barrie, Alberta Law Society Libraries and Alex McNeur, Digital Initiatives Librarian, Courthouse Libraries BC, will share their experiences with creating video tutorials. Don't miss this opportunity to acquire some new, dynamic skills!

PLENARY: Property Rights: What's All the Fuss?

Some view provincial legislative initiatives such as right of way acquisition laws and landscape level planning as unreasonable infringements on the rights of individual property owners. Bankes will explore the highly charged and emotional debate taking place in this country.

Speaker

Nigel Bankes, Professor and Chair of Natural Resources Law, Faculty of Law, University of Calgary. A leading expert on natural resources law and international environmental law, Bankes has taught real property law for many years. He is the editor of the Journal of Energy and Natural Resources Law.

Who Moved my CCCs?: Collection Development in the Digital Age

Changes in the information environment, especially the increased availability and functionality of digital content, is putting pressure on traditional collection development policies and practices. It's time to realign our approach to collection development policies (and our collections!) to better reflect current realities concerning budgets, space, format and access. How will we develop law collections to support our students, researchers and lawyers? This session will explore these questions from a general, theoretical level as well as make reference to specific issues in particular law libraries (academic, law firm and courthouse), and provide examples of collection development policy decisions and actions being debated and implemented.

Participants will learn how the realities of the new information environment is driving change in the philosophy of collection development and understand the issues involved with providing a balanced collection development policy that is grounded in reality while being responsive to and supportive of our clients and services.

Workflow - How Not To Be Swamped!

"There's just so much stuff coming at me!" Between reference requests, administrative meetings and everything else, it's far too easy to lose control of information and important tasks. Panelists will discuss strategies and tools that they use in their organizations to keep control, and their sanity. Participants will learn tips on managing workflows from the micro (solo) to the macro (team) scale.

Going Green at your Law Library: Learning from Calgary Public Library's Eco Action Team

Law libraries face unique challenges when attempting to implement green initiatives. They are often located within courthouses and law firms, making it difficult to have full control over building practices such as recycling and energy use. Law libraries also serve clientele and boards of professionals that may not place green initiatives high on their agenda, resulting in a unique environment for advocacy and marketing. Calgary Public Library (CPL) is a leader in implementing green initiatives in Canada's library community, and has won multiple awards for green marketing and efforts such as recycling and waste reduction. In this session, a panel of members from CPL's Eco Action Team will share their experience and offer advice to law libraries on how to develop an eco plan and marketing message, get staff, clients, and board members involved in green initiatives, and tackle complex issues such as recycling and procurement of sustainable materials. The panel will also share ideas for simple changes that can be made at your library to reduce its ecological footprint. This session is being offered by the Courthouse and Law Society Libraries Special Interest Group, but the intended audience is all law librarians.

Project Management in Law Firms: A New Role for Librarians?

Project management is becoming a popular phrase in the legal literature/community as lawyers are coming under increasing pressure to provide cost effective services to their clients. This session will provide members with an overview of how project management techniques are being applied in law firms. The session will then be opened up to a round table discussion so that we may hear from law firm librarians who have been involved in project management activities at their firms. Could project management become a new role for law firm librarians similar to the "knowledge management" roles?

Thinking Beyond the Law: Affects of Interdisciplinary Research on Law Librarians

This session will look at how the growing need for interdisciplinary research increasingly affects law librarians in our regular activities. Areas such as instruction/training, research/reference, collection development, current awareness, and keeping aware of developments within and outside of traditional law will be addressed by panel members from different areas of law librarianship. Participants will discover how interdisciplinary is addressed and embraced in law firm, corporate and academic law libraries.

If eBooks are the Medium, What's the Message?

With the increased popularity of many eReader platforms and a greater availability of eBooks in general is your law library in a position to confidently offer eBooks to their library users? When will we reach the tipping point for electronic books? This session will provide a practical overview on what to expect when offering eBooks in your library, including commentary from a legal publisher and a look at the consumer experience when interacting with eBooks.

Participants will gain an understanding of the issues involved when acquiring and providing access to eBooks, issues that concern publishers and an awareness of the available eReader platforms available.

Research Matters: Recent Research by CALL/ACBD Members

In this program two recent CALL/ACBD Research Grant recipients will present their research projects - from conception and construction of methodology, through the research process, and on to results, publication or implementation, and advice to researchers contemplating future projects.

The panelists will describe two very different types of research projects. "Canadian Current Index to Legal Periodicals" is a practical project which will discuss the feasibility study and pilot stage in the development of a current awareness service for Canadian and commonwealth journals. Such a service will fill a gap in research services and will be of interest to many law librarians and legal researchers. "Legal Visual Semiotics: Eighteenth Century Satirical Prints as Primary Sources" is an interdisciplinary research project which will appeal to everyone with an interest in legal history, language and visual symbols, as well as eighteenth century popular culture, communications and art.

The program will highlight the variety of projects undertaken by CALL/ACBD members and supported by the Research Grant. It will provide practical examples of project development, methodology and advice, as well as encourage future research projects by CALL/ACBD members.

Beyond the Adversarial Criminal Court System

There is a growing recognition that traditional courts cannot deal very well on their own with many of the social causes of recidivism. Various initiatives such as drug treatment courts, domestic violence courts and aboriginal courts have emerged in many parts of Canada to help the criminal justice system respond more effectively and more compassionately to the often complex social and personal issues involved in crime. In these courts, judges, probation officers, social workers, Crown and defense counsel and members of the community work in a more cooperative way to address all the dimensions of crime, restitution and rehabilitation. This panel discussion will introduce CALL members to a few of these alternative "problem-solving" courts, their origins, rules of procedure, manner of record-keeping and decision-making, challenges, and successes.

"You Say You Want a Revolution?" The Impact of the Federation of Law Societies in Canada's Task Force Report on the Canadian Common Law Degree

The Task Force Report on the Canadian Common Law Degree was released in October, 2009. Since that time, most law societies in Canada have stated that they will work together to draft a national standard for law schools awarding the common law degree based on the Report's findings. But exactly what does the Task Force Report say? How will it impact legal education in Canada? And how will this impact law libraries and librarians? Join us for a riveting discussion on the future of Canadian legal education.
